The negative consequences of the economic and political reforms in the late 80 – early 90's in the XX century, performed in the Soviet Union and then in Russia stimulated the growth of dissent in society and the formation of the miners' movement. Miners from the Rostov region, engaged in a strike in 1989, the middle of 1990s, took the lead in the protest movement. The article attempts to recreate the process of the miners' movement in the Rostov region, identify the stages and reveal their specificity.
